In diglossic situations, the code which is used for writing or in prestigious or formal domains is known as the H variety, and the other code is the L variety: High German is used in books and newspapers across Germany, Switzerland and Austria, but various forms of Low German are used in regions of this area. The genetic changes that would allow this to happen are poorly understood, but are thought to require an exact combination of changes in multiple genes. It is not only in political discourse where it is present; the flagging of nationhood is also present in sport.
